Ultimate Aaliyah Store and Artist.The ultimate in practical electronic kits that get the job done! Main menu Post navigation 2o6 Female Soldering Board The 2o6 Female soldering board is a pretty good way to get started in the world of electronic kits. You can use it to build a first level electronic kit, an experiment, or just to help yourself get started in soldering and electronics. The 2o6 female is a better version of the 2o6 male soldering board which is covered in the 2o6 Male Soldering Board post. Click on the image below to open the project in a new window or tab: This is one of the two major components of the 2o6 female soldering board. It is made up of some super thin gold plated copper and some thin stranded copper wire. The wire is very easy to solder to. To do this, you just need a soldering iron, solder, and a little heat. The component I soldered first was a 0.1" crystal that was easier to solder than a 1/8" LED which I also tried to solder. Once the crystal and LED were soldered in the wire, you need to connect it to your circuit board. This is easy because you just need to solder wires to your circuit board. The component I used to see if I was able to solder is the RC5-6018 Crystal. It is very easy to solder, and you get a nice little buzz when you turn it on. It also has a resistor built in so you can find its value easily. You can see the 82157476af
